Dialogue, according to management writer Peter Senge, is where team learning in organisations begins. In the field of counselling it is the very basis of the counsellor's art. And in education it makes possible rich learning in the form of communities of enquiry.

In this essential volume leading thinkers and practitioners in organisations, counselling and education present authoritative accounts of theory and practice. Frameworks and models sit alongside front-line case studies and reports from the field.

Originally presented at the 5th International Conference on Philosophy in Practice at Wadham College, Oxford the papers in this collection have been revised and often expanded to report and reflect on discussions at the conference itself. Sections are prefaced by introductions to the areas addressed, specially commissioned from practitioners active in the field:

- o Tim LeBon: Philosophical Counselling
- o Karin Murriss and Joanna Haynes: Philosophical Enquiry with Children
- o Nigel Laurie: Philosophy Goes To Work

The first publication from Practical Philosophy Press, the publishing arm of the Society for Philosophy in Practice, this book is sure to become an indispensable resource for philosophical practitioners in counselling, education and organisations and all others wanting to benefit from the latest thinking and experience in successfully thinking through dialogue.

Trevor Curnow (editor), an experienced philosopher with qualifications in counselling, has taught philosophy in the UK and Sudan. He studied at the Universities of Keele, East Anglia, Edinburgh and Lancaster, and one of his research interests is how philosophy and counselling can be brought together. At St Martin's College, Lancaster he helped pioneer the degree programme in Social Ethics. Much of his thinking over the past decade is contained in his Wisdom, Intuition and Ethics, published by Ashgate in 1999.
